THREE DAILIES OF NEW YORK.

Three Men of Strong Individuality as Journalists—Expanding News Items.

The three great dailies in New York represented three great men, who in different ways had each impressed his personality upon his journal in an almost equal degree. Horace Greeley, James Gordon Bennett, and Henry J. Raymond. Always there is found some one man, or woman, behind anything which becomes a power; the gradual realization of this fact makes one a believer in a God—only a supreme intelligence could have developed, could maintain the order of the universe. The individuality of these men impressed itself vitally upon their papers, and the public, who followed their leadership. James Gordon Bennett represented the enterprise and foresight of the immediate future, Horace Greeley its advanced thought and unselfish spirit, Henry J. Raymond its policy and statesman-craft. Of the three Mr. Raymond had the truest journalistic instinct, and more of the formative spirit, but Mr. Bennett was supplemented by an intelligent man, and naturally skillful journalist, Mr. Frederick Hudson, who made The New York Herald a newspaper—the first one this country, or any other, had ever seen.

The first newspapers, small though they were, filled their miniature page with moral aphorisms and pious sentiments. The news was crowded in a corner, briefly summarized, or neglected altogether, unless it found its way in the form of an advertisement. Mr. Hudson recognized the value of news. The Herald was poor, and could not afford to pay for news there was a cable or telegraph line to transmit it. Philadelphia was a more important port of entry in those early days than New York, but the Philadelphia papers, like those of New York, recorded the arrival of a vessel from England, and the interesting news it brought, in three lines, often out of sight, and without editorial reference. Mr. Hudson made a business of disinterring these items, amplifying them, and spreading them out in double-lined, making a vast number of headlines, in every variety of big type, until the despised item became a column, which excited the attention and talk of the city, and was perhaps copied back, headlines and all, into the paper from which it had been originally obtained; its editors being blissfully unconscious of the theft, and giving the credit to the New York journal.

Let me here say The Herald would never have lived and become a power, had Mr. Bennett been only, or chiefly, the mean, unscrupulous man he has been so often described. In his way he was conscientious, ambitious only for his paper and his son—to found a name and a paper that would live. He was illiterate but shrewd, and would do anything for any one who had the wit to attack him on the weak side.—Sennie June.

Fail of a Gifted Man.
Ten years ago I knew a young man of unusual brightness who had literary inclinations, with talent to uphold them. In common with all his friends I hailed him as a hero. He wrote poetry with glibness, and one string of verses that he dedicated to Whittier brought from the Quaker poet a letter that was not of a formal type at all. He showed his appreciation of the young man's talent by asking that "other specimens of versification" be sent him. The result was a prolonged correspondence, and, if I mistake not, the younger poet went one summer up into New England as Mr. Whittier's guest. My friend had one peculiarity. His themes were always religious. "No true poet," he said to me once, "can ever write what he does not feel; and I am the chosen poet of the church." The other day I chanced upon a man who has known him since he drifted out of my sight, and my faith in the general goodness of things was shattered. The young man to whom Whittier took the strong fancy, the "chosen poet of the church," is in jail. A Philadelphia judge has sent him up for a year for beating his wife.—Halston in New York Times.

Usefulness of the Lemon.
Lemons are one of the most useful fruits in our domestic economy. The juice of half a lemon in a glass of water, without sugar, will frequently cure a sick headache. If the hands be stained, there is nothing that will remove the stain better than a lemon or a lemon and salt. After the juice has been squeezed from the lemon the refuse can be used for this purpose. Lemon juice is also a very good remedy for rheumatism and the so-called biliousness of spring. In the latter case the juice should be taken before breakfast. The pulp may be also eaten, avoiding every particle of skin. Lemon juice and sugar, mixed very thick, is useful to relieve coughs and sore throats. It must be very acid as well as sweet. As a drink lemonade is not only a luxury, but exceedingly wholesome. It is a good temperance drink. Hot lemonade in winter will break up a cold if taken at the start. Cool lemonade in summer will refresh one who is tired and thirsty. As a harvest drink it has no equal. There is no danger in taking too much, and it never produces drunkenness and disease.—Herald of Health.

Peculiarities of a Pavement.
The city fathers of Steubenville, Ohio, concluded to lay a new pavement two years ago, and they just dug one foot below the surface of the street, put in four inches of sand, four inches of gravel and then set four-inch fire-brick on edge. Then they covered the top with sand for a time, and now they have the finest pavement in the world. This is on the main street of Steubenville, and after two years' use shows no perceptible wear at all.

As to its advantages. It is almost entirely noiseless. Ice doesn't adhere to it in winter time at all. It can be taken up and repaired without any trouble. Horses slip on Belgian blocks and on asphalt, but on this, no matter how wet the weather may be, they will retain a firm footing. There is no objection whatever to be raised against this style of pavement. The merits of it are beauty, durability, noiselessness, cheapness and safety in driving. It possesses every element that a good pavement should have. It is absolutely perfect.—New York Tribune.
